A note from Don Jones:

Indians

What high school would dare try to do Indians with a virtually all male cast? I decided to do it but to balance it with "I Remember Mama" which would balance it with a production with many female roles. Philip designed a wonderfully theatrical set which allowed some of the audience to sit on the stage to watch what was essentially a hyped up wild west side show. Gerry Cavagnaro played a wonderful Buffalo Bill, Paul Kirtland a strong Geronimo, Bob Fieldsteel and Nate Moon endured hours of make up to play Chief Joseph and Sitting Bull. Billy Gravert with his shock of blonde hair played a Russian count and Lynn Grosinsky played the sole female role. Nick Mastro again took on a major role as John Grass. Would young high school boys feel comfortable wearing loin cloths? We started by using gym shorts and tee shirts and gradually worked up to the real deal. WE needed a ton of body make up which took a great deal of time and effort to apply. Following the curtain call there was always a mad dash to the gym so they could wash it all off and return to greet the audience who was anxious to speak with them. Ron Mayers and Arthur Vogt played elected officials who were more interested in themselves than the well-being of the Indians. Look carefully and you can see a very young Peter Coffee in an Indian blanket.
